

Berlin Pond is a public resource and should be enjoyed by everybody not just an elite few. When the pond was opened up My wife and I took our kayak up and paddled around the pond because I have always wanted to. Imagine my surprise when I saw a path from the back of every residence around the pond that led down to the water and a couple of houses that even had docks. At the northern end of the pond there were a series of buoys with with signs that warned people to keep out of the area because it was a loon nesting area. These signs were ancient and had been in place for a long time.If nobody was supposedly using the pond, why would the state put up the signs?I believe an elite few people have had a private pond at taxpayers expense.
