The Benefits of Public Investment During Challenging Economic Times

Simply put, dollars invested in community-based long term care services save money by avoiding the need for more expensive forms of medical and institutional care.

Senior Meals - According to the Nutrition Screening Initiative (NSI) Research Study:

- For every $1 invested in senior nutrition programs, $3.25 is saved in health care costs.
- The average cost of treating a malnourished older adult during a hospital stay is approximately four times greater than the costs of caring for a senior who is well-nourished ($12,683 versus $2,968.)
- The Kaiser Permanente group has found that nutrition screening and intervention can reduce hospital utilization rates for older adults by 25% - 45%.

Case Management -

- Frail seniors who are able to remain living at home require far less state funded support than those living in nursing homes.
- Casework assistance with the management of chronic disease helps reduce utilization of in-patient hospital care and the need for institutional placement.

Health Promotion/Injury Prevention -

- Exercise, wellness and injury prevention programs work! These programs are cost effective and save hundreds of thousands of dollars in medical and long term care each year.
