i am not an anti-vaxxer but someone who believes that what goes into my body and those of my children should be determined by me and not the state. Take for example the MMR vaccination that has created the climate of fear that has politicians racing to remove philosophical and indeed religious exemptions. Do you know that one popular brand of vaccine ProQuad contains WI- 38 human diploid lung fibroblasts according to the CDC website listing all the ingredients in vaccines?

This ingredient is a cell culture derived from human cells from aborted 3 month old fetuses. I for one do not want someone else's DNA in my body or that of my children. If you go to wikipedia, you will see that it specifies that it is taken from WHITE fetuses. I have to wonder whether this distinction goes back to the racial classifications of years ago that if you had ONE DROP of black blood in you, then you were considered black?

In any event, i fully appreciate in this culture of fear that the push is for vaccination and if people want to vaccinate that is fine. There is no shortage of information on the need to vaccinate everywhere you turn. All I am saying is that it is an individual choice and people need to do their own investigations. The whole discussion is actually quite farcical given that even if you have 100% vaccination in schools, those same children will mix with other kids that are homeschooled in parks, supermarkets etc. which renders everything moot. If vaccines are all they say they are, why were 29 of the Disney kids who got measles, already vaccinated? There is much to be considered here but removal of the philosophical and religious exemptions are not one of them. Please OPPOSE THIS BILL.
