What are Domestic Violence Accountability Programs?

- Domestic Violence Accountability Programs (DVAPs) are community-based, weekly co-facilitated group education programs.
- Individuals need not be charged with any crime, but the wide majority of offenders are court ordered to attend.
- Offenders who have committed misdemeanor level domestic violence offenses gain skills and support to change their behavior, stay out of jail, and stay in the community.
- Group participants understand the impact of their abuse, and learn how to replace tactics of coercive control with respect and nonviolence.
- Partners and children are safer, because a community program connects them with an advocate from the Network Against Domestic and Sexual Violence.
- Each program is facilitated by two co-facilitators.
- Programs adhere to the Statewide Standards for Domestic Violence Accountability Programs which ensure consistency in approach and effectiveness.

How are Vermont DVAP Programs funded?

- Programs currently receive no state or federal funding.
- Programs currently charge offenders on a sliding scale rate beginning at $25 per person. All monies collected need to cover facilitators' preparation time, training and professional development, expenses, and facilitation time.

Funding History for Domestic Violence Accountability Programs

- While many victims rely on the criminal justice system – especially the courts – to provide safety, the system for providing accountability to offenders has recently undergone significant changes in funding in Vermont.
- In 2013, the Department of Corrections modified all programming in correctional institutions effectively ending corrections-based programming focused specifically on domestic violence.
- In 2014, the statewide appropriation that had traditionally supported community-based domestic violence accountability programs was eliminated.
- Less than a year later, the state’s largest Domestic Violence Accountability Program provider (Spectrum), serving 6 of Vermont’s 14 counties, closed their program.
- In June of 2016, the Department of Corrections grant funding for the contract of the Domestic Violence Accountability Coordinator ended, leaving the Council on Domestic Violence with no staff to conduct certification of programs, sustain technical assistance, or training for DVAPs.
- As of January 2017, these programs no longer benefit from any designated funding, and the Vermont Council on Domestic Violence will be unable to fulfill its statutory duty to certify program compliance with Statewide Standards.
- The courts and the Agency of Human Services can only make referrals to certified Domestic Violence Accountability Programs--without sustainable funding in the coming fiscal year all certification processes will end, which means that Domestic Violence Accountability programming will cease to exist.

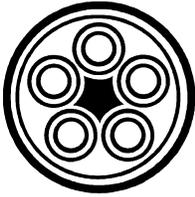

How many people benefit from DVAPS?

- There are 12 certified programs providing services in Vermont. Two of these programs are in the interim certification process. Without funding, programs will have no support for certification.
- Each year, over 300 individuals enroll in domestic violence accountability programs in Vermont. In 2015, 350 offenders enrolled in domestic violence accountability programs in Vermont. This number is an increase over 2014 (320), even with the loss of our biggest provider in 2015.
- Department for Children and Families has made over 40 referrals to DVAP programs this year.

How do we know DVAPs work?

- The Mirabal Project Study of similar DVA Programs in the UK found that “Far fewer women reported being physically injured after the programme (61% before compared to 2% after) and the extent to which children saw/overheard violence also dropped substantially (from 80% to 8%).¹

How are Vermont DVA Programs monitored?

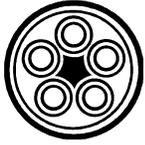

- DVA Programs are required by statute to be certified in Vermont. They must adhere to Vermont's Statewide Standards for Domestic Violence Accountability Programs (Statewide Standards) to receive referrals from the VT Department of Children and Families, the VT Department of Corrections, and the Court. DVAPs accept self-referrals.
- The Vermont Council on Domestic Violence oversees training and certification for Domestic Violence Accountability Programs, through a part-time Coordinator and a Council committee.
- Local coordinated community response teams participate in biennial re-certification of DVAPS. Communities are deeply invested in the quality of this vital programming.
- The standards and certification process in Vermont provide for training and technical assistance and ensure consistency of services throughout the state.

Why does Vermont need community based DVAPs?

- DVA Programs are part of a continuum of criminal justice system interventions for men who use violence against intimate partners. We need community DVAPs, along with Risk Reduction Programming through the Department of Corrections. Vermont is now well-situated to identify which programming will most benefit perpetrators of domestic violence, since the Department of Corrections will soon implement the DVSI-R (Domestic Violence Severity Instrument-Revised) a tool which allows trained staff to more accurately assess which response from the criminal justice system will effectively hold the offender accountable, and ensure victim safety.
- This Spring, the Vermont Department of Corrections will train three community DVAP sites in the evidence-based ACT-V curriculum. The ACT-V curriculum is designed to reduce/end men's use of abusive and controlling behaviors and to increase men's use of respectful, adaptive, healthy relationship behaviors.² A study comparing men who participated in ACT-V programs with men who participated in a traditional DVAP curriculum found significantly fewer participants were arrested in the 12 months following the intervention.³ However, programs will be unable to take advantage of this opportunity without funding.
