

- People have become desensitized to all the gun violence happening all over the country.

- We need stronger laws to make sure people who are mentally unstable do not have access to guns.

^{mass} 17 people dying should not happen so frequently that these kinds of events become normal

- I support the right to defend or protect yourself so long as that does not interfere with someone else's right to live.

- I know the emotions I was supposed to feel after the school shooting but honestly I didn't feel what I would expect myself to feel. I definitely wasn't surprised to hear there had been another gun-related tragedy, bit as a teenager that attends a public school I should've been more scared to go to school the next day, but I wasn't; not because a wasn't scared I just wasn't MORE scared.

I always knew a school shooting was possible, maybe because of the monthly drills that we experience or nearly the many other school shootings, either way I am always scared. This kind of event has become normal we have become desensitized, but I have to keep reminding myself that this is not normal and we as a country should not let it be normal, and the way to do that is to create stronger gun laws, so that people who are mentally unstable can't get guns so these tragedies never happen.

Always going to school
I wasn't scared
a day

going to school

should be able to feel safe
