

The fact that life begins at conception is a scientific fact that we should all be aware of by now. Abortion is the murder of an innocent human life.

There is a lot of talk about abortion being a “women’s rights” issue. My question is: When does a woman get to cash in on her women’s rights?

My daughter was born just five months ago. Before she was born, she had her own body, her own XX Chromosomes indicating that she was female, and her very own uterus and yet she could have been killed at almost any point for virtually any reason.

Where are her women’s rights?

One of the primary purposes of the law is to protect liberties or rights. In a situation where the rights of two individuals are at odds with one another, we expect the law to determine and protect the right that is considered more fundamental.

In the case of a pregnant woman and her child, we have the woman’s right to not be pregnant contrasted with her unborn child’s right to life.

Life is full of instances where we have to yield our rights to one another. For example, I have the right to drive my car down the road. However, if a pedestrian is walking down the street, I yield my right to drive to their right to not be hit by a car because their life is more valuable than my desire to drive.

In a case where a woman feels she has the right to no longer be pregnant, we have to recognize that her child actually possesses the more fundamental right. Pregnancy is a sometimes uncomfortable and even painful condition. But it is temporary. Death- as we know, is forever.

Therefore, In a situation of opposing human rights, we expect the law to uphold the more fundamental of the two rights - which is always, always, the right to life.

In conclusion, the question we need to ask ourselves is - where is all of this headed? If we legalize abortion through all 9 months for any reason at all, what kinds of things will our children legislate? We kill our children in the womb - will our children leave their babies out to die after birth as In the days of the Roman Empire?

Oh wait. That’s already happening.

Will our children take our decisions further by legalizing infanticide? Will they clean up the streets, empty the prisons and diminish the foster care system by killing off all the unwanted human beings?

There’s no way to say how far this will go unless we say that enough is enough.

Let's just back it all up, put our foot down and establish some truth that should be non negotiable- human life has value, meaning, and purpose because it is HUMAN- not just when it is a "wanted" "healthy" or "convenient" life.

I propose that we reject h.57 and start valuing all stages of human life and try to leave a better world for our children than the one that was left for us.

Thank you,
