

Art does not belong to any particular sector of the population. The making of art is an irrepressible force that is true of everyone.

Gregory Sharrow / Folklorist, 1950-2018

Dear Friends of Vermont Arts,

Over the past twelve months, our staff and trustees have visited more than sixty-five towns and villages across Vermont. We toured museums, theaters, and community arts centers, visited artists in their studios, held grant seeker workshops, and listened to ideas and questions from the field. Thank you to all of the Vermont artists and arts organizations that continue to challenge and inspire us!

Here is a glimpse of the Council's work in FY2018:

- We invested $754,168 in grants and services that support individual artists, arts in education programs, and cultural organizations across Vermont.
- Creation Grants provided ten outstanding artists with the gift of time to imagine new works that include a dance collaboration, an ecological memoir, an album of original fiddle music, and a theatrical piece built around stories of female veterans.
- Teaching artists shared their skills and inspiration with students in forty classrooms and six Head Start Arts Integration Programs across the state.
- Sixteen cultural facilities received support for critical infrastructure improvements or for making their buildings welcoming to all patrons, particularly those with disabilities.
- Working with the NEK Collaborative, we launched a six-month study and a strategic action plan for the creative economy in the Northeast Kingdom. Our goal is to complete a statewide action plan in the coming year, designed to spark investment in Vermont's vital creative enterprises.

The quote from Greg Sharrow that opens this report reminds us that art belongs to us all—a sentiment that seems more important with each passing day. We are grateful to each of you for your passion, support, and partnership.

With thanks,

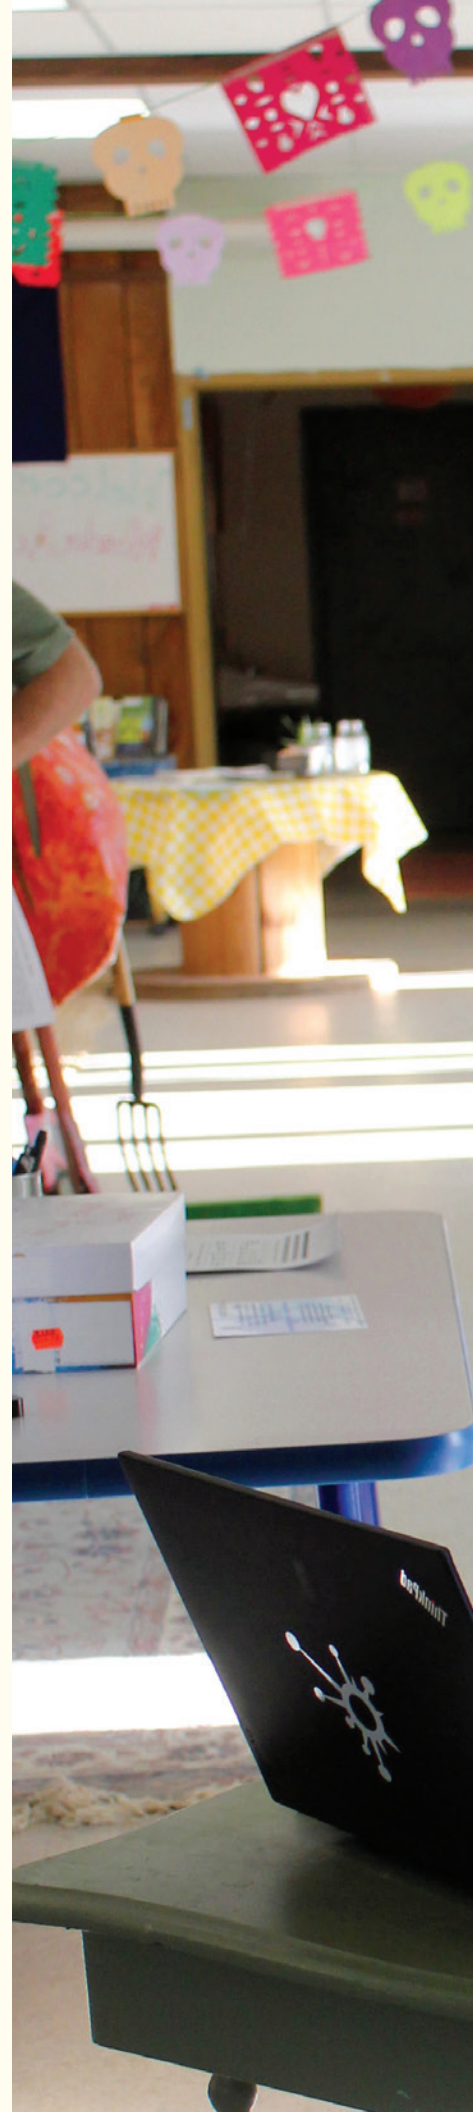

Karen Mittelman, Executive Director

Bob Stannard, Chair

Equity

Removing barriers invites access and participation

A group of young performers in period costumes are dancing on a stage. They have their arms raised and are smiling. The background is dark with some stage lights. The entire image has a red overlay.

The core values of equity, collaboration, creativity, integrity, and reflection guide the Arts Council board and staff as we work to build a Vermont where everyone has access to the arts and creativity in their lives, education, and communities. The following pages offer a view into how Vermont artists, organizations, schools, and communities are bringing that vision to life.

Empowering Young People through the arts

More than ten thousand children across the state of Vermont learned the art of puppetry, designed wind sculptures, or expressed themselves through dance, painting, or theater, thanks to Arts Council programs. These programs develop the creative and innovative thinkers of tomorrow, helping young people to grow academically, socially, and civically through the arts.

Young children gain vital skills as they experience the joy of creativity through Head Start Arts Integration Programs across the state.

The Artists in Schools Program brings highly skilled teaching artists into Vermont schools. Designed as collaborations between artists and classroom teachers, these intensive residencies offer students new ways to learn and provide tools for teachers to embed the arts into the curriculum.

Arts Partnership and Arts Impact Grants support community arts organizations that bring children into inspiring spaces through classes, camps, and after-school programs. For example, Music-COMP pairs professional musicians with young composers as they create original music; and the In-Sight Photography Project offers photography classes to Brattleboro area youth, regardless of their ability to pay.

In 2018, more than five thousand Vermont high school students took part in Poetry Out Loud, a national competition created by the National Endowment for the Arts and the Poetry Foundation. Through Poetry Out Loud, students explore, memorize, and recite great works of poetry from Robert Frost to Tato Laviera. We are proud that Vera Escaja-Heiss, the Vermont state champion, competed at the national level in Washington, D.C., and was named one of nine finalists.

Enriching public spaces

Vermont's Art in State Buildings (AISB) program has been bringing public spaces to life through art since the program began in 1988.

In addition to enhancing Vermont's landscape, AISB projects offer Vermont artists challenging opportunities to create new and often large-scale work that will be viewed by thousands. These works of art deepen the meaning and history of a place, transform the built environment, and create vibrant public spaces that distinguish Vermont towns and communities.

In 2018, AISB enabled the creation of Honor, a monumental bronze sculpture for the Vermont Veterans Memorial Cemetery in Randolph Center. Artist Karen Petersen considered the important historical role of horses in the military, as well as the local connection to the Morgan breed, which was developed on a farm in Randolph. In

Boosting the creative economy

When it comes to the creative economy in the Northeast Kingdom (NEK), Jody Fried knows his numbers.

Without hesitation, the Catamount Arts executive director can tell you that in 2017, the creative economy was responsible for 9.4 percent of all the jobs in the NEK—an impressive 31 percent above the national average.

These statistics are backed by an in-depth creative economy study and action plan commissioned by the Vermont Arts Council in 2018. Supported by grants from the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Vermont Community Foundation, this project is providing both the data and the specific action steps required to tap the NEK's creative and entrepreneurial energies and to promote economic growth in the region.

Jody and his team are eager to move from the planning stage to action. “The NEK has a wealth of cultural assets with significant untapped potential. We know we can harness the energies of organizations and individuals throughout the NEK to benefit the economy and improve the quality of life for all NEK residents.”

The Vermont Creative Network, an initiative of the Vermont Arts Council, is using this project to inform and inspire the next step forward—a statewide creative sector study and action plan that will begin in 2019.

Exploring connections through movement

Christal Brown wears many hats. She is the chair of the dance program at Middlebury College; founder of INSPIRIT, a dance company; director of Middlebury Dance Company; a dancer; and a choreographer.

The thread connecting all of these roles is a passion for the power of movement as a force for change. Christal received a Creation Grant to support the development of What We Ask of Flesh, a collaboration with poet Remica Bingham. In developing her proposal, Christal expressed her hope “that the work becomes a catalyst for dialogue about difference, expectation, and human capacity.” The grant enabled her to focus on expanding the work from a solo to an ensemble piece, which she plans to tour in 2019.
