

The Salisbury, Vermont hatchery is too important of a resource to close down right now. Trout fishing generates revenue for the state through liscence fees, tackle sales, and trout tourism, and it provides a way for Vermonters of all ages to engage in conservation and fishing. For it to take a hit now would be to damage a Vermont natural resource and revenue generator at a time when the state needs to preserve these things. Maintaining as many local hatcheries as we should be a matter of pride for Vermont.
