Requests for additional information, and comments on additional discussion or questions raised by Committee members:

-Is there a more up-to-date list of 3-acre sites?

- A. Yes. The 3-acre site list currently on the DEC Stormwater Program website is updated and dated 12/18/2024, and found here:
<https://dec.vermont.gov/document/3AcreList>

-Do we have a table sorted in a different way, by which sites are already permitted, categories of types of properties (schools, MHC's, private businesses, residential developments/subdivisions, etc.), sites that are difficult to deal with (for any reason – technologically, logistically – ex. residential w/ no HOA). Can we crystallize down to some properties that are logistically, financially, or technologically too difficult, and look into easier properties to get load reductions from; use our limited funding to get the lower hanging fruit.

- A. We are providing two files with tables for the Committee. The first file is focused on funding information categorized by town and county, with columns displaying the amount of funding awarded, percent of total funds going to each town, and the percent and total number of 3-acre sites in each town and county. The second file is a modified version of the 3-acre list with a new column showing the land use type for each site (residential, commercial, State, municipal, school, quarry, etc.), as well as the columns that were already on the list showing project number, owner or permit name, address, town, previously issued operational permits, estimate of impervious acres, lake segment, and stormwater-impaired watershed (if applicable).

The Department is reluctant to produce a list of all sites that would display property owner and address information distinguishing those sites that are fully permitted from those sites that are not. We can respond to the request for information on which sites (and categories of sites) are already permitted in a broader manner and provide some estimates related to the number of sites for specific categories of projects.

In the Department's experience there are likely to be examples of challenges with compliance from each of the various types of 3-acre properties, but there are certain project categories where the difficulties may be greater:

- multi-lot residential subdivisions, particularly those lacking an owner's association (approximately 100 total residential 3-acre subdivision sites, approximately 18 lacking an association) – the total number of these sites that are currently fully permitted is approximately 10%.
- some multi-lot business/commercial/industrial parks
- larger sites discharging to any stormwater-impaired water, due to the additional requirement to meet the Channel Protection Standard
- sites discharging to a stormwater-impaired water that lack an approved cleanup plan and are required to treat or control greater volumes of stormwater runoff from their sites; this applies to only 3 watersheds in the State: Moon Brook in Rutland City, Clay Brook in Warren, and the Roaring Brook & E. Branch Roaring Brook in Killington) (approximately 15 total sites)
- agricultural fair sites (4 sites)
- quarries and gravel pits (approximately 30-40 sites)

Of note and often overlooked in the discussions focusing on 3-acre sites, certain sub-3-acre existing developed sites within stormwater-impaired watersheds need to complete an EFA and meet the same treatment standards applicable to 3-acre sites. These sites have challenges due in part to: (a) the $40 million of state ARPA funding for 3-acre permit obtainment and assistance was unavailable (b) some sub-3-acre sites are residential subdivisions which may lack organizational structure and needed cooperation among multiple property owners and the municipality, and (c) there isn't the same level of awareness and attention focused on these sites in comparison to 3-acre sites.

-Department comments on how infeasibility or challenges with achieving compliance through on-site treatment are addressed in the current 3-acre regulatory language.

Feasibility considerations were established in Act 64/10 V.S.A. §1264. Specific criteria were later adopted in Rule and the General Permit to enable designers and property owners to consider site and property use limitations in their Engineering Feasibility Analysis (EFA). These criteria do not require 3-acre site owners to purchase land for off-site treatment, permanently remove or permanently preclude the use of existing infrastructure, permanently preclude the existing land use through site re-grading, infiltrate stormwater where basement flooding or groundwater contamination is an issue, construct in wetlands or wetland buffers, or undertake any actions not permissible under local, state or federal regulations. Permitting and implementation cost, in addition to logistical challenges such as property owner organization and coordination for previously permitted subdivisions, are not feasibility considerations. While there is no general exemption based on cost effectiveness, a property owner is not required to construct a stormwater best management practice when implementation will result in a treatment improvement of 10% or less over existing conditions. In these cases, the treatment requirements are met. Sites that cannot meet applicable treatment standards based on the completed EFA may pay an impact fee, which is adjusted based on the percentage of standard met. Sites may alternatively and voluntarily pursue an offset project to fully meet applicable standards. Offset projects are off-site stormwater treatment projects (i.e. treatment of stormwater runoff from impervious surface rather than natural resource improvement or restoration projects) that do not otherwise require permit coverage. Impact fees are one-time fees paid by a property owner that are deposited into watershed-specific accounts, funds that are eventually available for projects that can exceed 3-acre treatment standards.

Most 3-acre sites are required to meet a 50% stormwater treatment standard, which in most cases translates to treating only $\frac{1}{2}$ of the impervious area on the site if feasible. Only sites discharging to stormwater-impaired streams need to additionally manage for flow. Sites that can exceed the standard by at least 10% are eligible to receive payment from watershed impact fee account, mitigating for sites where treatment is infeasible. The purpose of stormwater impact fees is to ensure that projects that are not able to fully meet standards are still able to indirectly mitigate the impact of their stormwater by providing funds to projects that voluntarily can exceed treatment, either deliberately or by the nature of the design.

-Can a prioritization of 3-acre sites be made to exclude sites where achieving compliance may be more difficult or less likely to result in high levels of pollutant reductions?

Excluding certain categories of projects from the 3-acre requirements may have the following implications:

- 1) Statute and Rule would need to be revised, and the TMDL may need to be re-opened and reviewed again by EPA, perhaps resulting in undesired changes and imposition of new requirements.
- 2) The necessary pollutant reductions expected to meet the TMDL goals would need to be achieved from other additional sources that would need to be newly regulated and fit into the TMDL framework.
- 3) There is not a simple, fair, and consistent method or set of methods to determine which individual sites or categories of sites are more challenged and facing greater difficulties than others, or which sites may be contributing a substantially lower pollutant load and should be candidates for exclusion. The regulatory definition of an "impervious surface of three or more acres" includes all sites that meet that definition and does as a result provide regulatory predictability and consistency.
- 4) Removing only certain types of sites while leaving others as regulated 3-acre sites may result in others seeking removal of their sites and foster a sense of unfairness. Challenges to DEC decisions related to exclusion would also likely delay implementation.

-Request for the number of 3-acre sites that would not be regulated 3-acre sites if the municipal road impervious surface that is part of the 3-acre site development was removed from the acreage of impervious used in the 3-acre site determination.

A. ANR does not have a number that can be easily and quickly obtained. There would be some sites that would no longer be identified as 3-acre sites if the municipal road impervious surface was not included as part of the site. Many others, and likely most sites inclusive of municipally-owned roads, would remain 3-acre sites, however with a reduced acreage of impervious surface subject to the requirements. The reduced total impervious acreage may translate into a larger lift for the private property owners.

The municipal roads that are part of residential multi-lot 3-acre sites were part of the original development and correctly included in the previous operational stormwater permitting for the site, and therefore these surfaces are component of the developed 3-acre sites. This also applies to many of the permitted sites in Vermont that are not 3-acre sites. There was not a new approach taken for the 3-acre site permitting.

-Recommended path of compliance for 3-acre residential neighborhoods in which not all homeowners are willing to form an HOA.

A. ANR does not have authority to directly compel a preexisting multi-lot housing development to organize an owners' association, because organizing such an association is a matter directly involving real property interests that the Vermont General Assembly did not expressly address when it created the three-acre stormwater permit requirement. Owners of property subject to three-acre permitting are nonetheless required to obtain and comply with permit coverage. While an owners' association may serve as co-applicant for permit coverage, another legal entity accepting responsibility for the stormwater management system may also serve in this role.

Failure to obtain permit coverage (which may involve a failure to form a responsible entity for obtaining coverage) may affect the title to the noncomplying property and any proposed conveyance of that property. While ANR has enforcement authority for these situations, enforcing against many owners at one time is likely prohibitively complicated. Uncorrected violations and outdated stormwater management may in turn affect the anticipated three-acre stormwater phosphorus reductions.

ANR may process an application and ultimately issue a permit so long as a "responsible party or parties" accepts responsibility for the entire stormwater management system. This is an approach that can be taken as a path to compliance for 3-acre developments lacking an owner's association and provisions in the current draft H.481 bill may foster a greater willingness for municipalities to accept that responsibility.

A targeted Legislative amendment directing the formation of appropriate legal entities, preferably with associated funding, for the purpose of three-acre stormwater compliance may also be an option to explore.

-At 3-acre housing developments that are surrounded by grass, meadow, and swales, it doesn't feel like we are going to do much good for the money we are going to pour into this.

A. The Department acknowledges there are some residential developments that may be able to fully or in large part meet the applicable 3-acre standards via permanently preserving existing vegetated areas (including lawns) as stormwater “disconnection” areas for acceptable stormwater treatment, if these areas meet certain design specifications in the current VT SW Management Manual. These sites may be permitted with little to no construction needed. There is a benefit to preserving and formalizing the vegetated disconnection areas for stormwater treatment as part of a stormwater discharge permit, however some of these sites may not achieve much in the way of improvements in pollutant reduction over existing conditions. In the Department’s experience, it is relatively uncommon for a residential 3-acre site to have the ability to rely exclusively on disconnection to meet the requirements.

The original stormwater management design for many 3-acre sites relied upon vegetated swales rather than providing for long enough flow paths, appropriately minor to moderate slopes, and other necessary elements that make vegetated stormwater disconnection areas effective for pollutant removal. In most cases the swales in these developments were designed for conveyance or at best, pre-treatment of stormwater runoff only. They do not provide sufficient hydraulic residence time within the swale under design flow conditions (i.e. the 1” water quality storm event that contains the most pollutants including phosphorus) for the removal of pollutants other than larger sediment particles. Many of these pre-2002 designs for 3-acre residential subdivisions are a likely source of phosphorus loading in the watershed.

The major sources of phosphorus within each sector of the Lake Champlain TMDL vary by lake segment, but there are some general trends made clear from the modeling work that was completed. Within the developed land sector, roads are the single largest source category in most lake segment watersheds, while impervious surfaces in residential, commercial, and industrial land use categories (as a group) represent the next largest developed land sector source in most watersheds. In the large Main Lake segment, which has well over 200 3-acre sites in total, developed land and streambank erosion are the largest sources, exceeding agricultural sources. We conservatively estimate there are greater than 30 residential 3-acre site subdivisions in the Main Lake segment alone. Exempting these sites from 3-acre requirements would result in significantly less expected pollutant reductions under the TMDL’s developed lands sector, a reduction which would need to be achieved elsewhere, such as on other property within the developed lands sector that would need to be identified and newly regulated.

-Recommended guidelines for equity in dealing with uncovered [unpermitted, unregulated, not 3-acre sites, etc.] properties that are upstream from a 3-acre site. Having to process someone else's stormwater.

A. Generally speaking, the owner of a 3-acre site is not required to treat stormwater runoff flowing onto their land from neighboring parcels, but rather, must ensure such runoff is routed to not interfere with the treatment of runoff from the site. Stormwater designers may bypass or reroute off-site stormwater runoff to direct it away from the proposed stormwater treatment or control practices on the 3-acre site, but the designer must ensure that redirected runoff will be safely conveyed such that it will not cause channel erosion or flooding problems in the area where it is routed. If such rerouting is not feasible and there is off-site runoff that will flow into proposed 3-acre site treatment or control infrastructure, that infrastructure does need to be sized adequately and designed to accommodate for all contributing stormwater runoff. This is a requirement of the Vermont Stormwater Management Manual for all projects requiring an operational stormwater permit and is not only applicable to 3-acre sites. There may however be circumstances on 3-acre sites where an Engineering Feasibility Analysis determines that due to the volume of off-site runoff flowing onto the 3-acre site area, the infeasibility of rerouting that off-site runoff, and limited space on the site due to existing infrastructure and development, it would not be feasible to adequately size a new treatment or control practice for all contributing runoff. Stormwater best management practices are often constructed to either bypass or accommodate offsite contributing volume, however may also be a consideration as part of the EFA.

Summary for Senate Committee on Natural Resources and Energy
Submitted by Vermont Department of Environmental Conservation
Data accurate as of 4.16.2025

Note that DEC has two large-scale funding initiatives - the Green Schools Initiative, and the Stormwater Construction and Technical Assistance for 3-acre Manufactured Housing Communities - that both utilize the assistance of a contracted Funding Program Administrator to manage funds on behalf of benefitting sites. In these scenarios, while the dollars are encumbered into a contract, they haven't all been fully committed to individual sites and so can't be counted by town or county. These dollars are bundled under the line "Not Yet Distributed." Also note, this list excludes towns and counties that have no three-acre sites.

Total State Administered Funding Awarded by County

Number of 3-Acre Sites by County

Summary for House Committee on Environment Submitted by Vermont Department of Environmental Conservation Data accurate as of 4.9.2025	Please note these numbers are a constantly moving target as new sites start work and advance their progress towards construction. Data may be vulnerable to some double counting across the funding and regulatory data sets but DEC has tried to avoid duplication to the greatest extent feasible. Note we are restricted to reporting out on sites that have engaged with DEC and there may be other sites making progress that we are not yet aware of. Also note the costs section (Table 3) generates a median from a unique site-type (schools) with site conditions that may not apply to other sites. Construction costs can vary based on practices, site needs, and landowner preferences.

Table 3: Costs

Three-acre costs vary based on number of acres required for treatment and the site characteristics. DEC does not track as part of the permitting process the projected or actual construction expenses for all three-acre sites at time of design, bidding, or post-construction. DEC's funding programs have some preliminary insights into permitting costs and construction costs for sites we are supporting although it's limited to what they might have reported or what they invoiced the Department.

Phase	Estimated Cost per Three-Acre Site	Methodology
Design/permitting	$ 34,967.64	This reflects the median expenses billed on 21 closed out awards through the Permit Obtainment Assistance Program. Costs include engineering/design expenses and permitting expenses (for both three-acre permit and other applicable permits).
Construction	$ 308,228.00	This reflects the median cost estimate for 29 public schools that have either completed construction or received construction bids.
Both	$ 394,837.54	This is not the sum of the above two lines. This uses the median acreage of all three-acre sites listed on the 2020 3-acre list and applies other assumptions/median values to calculation. Formula = [5.41(Median site acreage subject to three-acre permitting)$860 + $240] + $30,000 (estimated per site engineering/design expense) + [5.41(Median site acreage subject to three-acre permitting)$66,533.26 (median construction cost per acre for the 29 public schools)]

List of sites subject to the 3 acre requirements of GP 3-9050

This list contains sites with three or more acres of impervious in the Lake Champlain, Lake Memphremagog, and stormwater-impaired watersheds that are subject to the 3-acre requirements of General Permit 3-9050. The area of impervious surfaces for most sites is based on 2011 and 2016 GIS mapped data where available and may differ somewhat from what is on the ground. For some sites that were not initially listed the area of impervious acres is based on review of information submitted to the Department in permit application materials. The impervious surface associated with a given project may not be reflective of the amount of impervious surface for which permit coverage is required. Some of the project numbers have been revised from those assigned in prior lists and a different project number is not indicative of a new project or new permitting being required if a site currently has a permit and is fully compliant. Affected property owners are being notified by the Department of their permitting obligations.
