

As a retired auto mechanic, I've spent $1000's and wasted countless hours making needless repairs to pass Vt inspection. The inspectors know its ridiculous but have to follow rules . Mostly its surface rust or small holes in rocker panels , nothing structural.

States that don't have inspections aren't less safe; NH recently ended yearly inspection, we should do the same.
Most of us get oil changed and tires swapped twice a year. What better time to be advised about problems without having to make another trip and take time off from work.
